Poetical.

"KISS ME, MOTHER, AND LET ME GO."

The following beautiful lines we find in a recent number of the Springfield Republican. They are by the author of "Over the River," and will be read with interest by all patriotic lovers of good poetry:--

Have you heard the news that I heard to-day?
The news that troubles on every lip?
The sky is darker again they say,
And breakers threaten the good old ship.

Our country calls on her sons again,
To strike in her name, at a dastard foe;
My grandfathers fell in that fight, you know:
And I would be one, mother, let me go.

The love of country was with me:
I remember how my young heart would thrill
When I used to sit on my grandfather's knee
And list to the story of Bunker Hill.

Life gushed out in a rich red flood;
My grandfathers fell in that fight, you know:
Would you have me shun the brave old blood?
Nay, kiss me, mother, and let me go.

Our flag, the flag of our hope and pride,
With its stars and stripes, and its field of blue,
Is mocked, insulted, torn down, defiled,
And trampled upon by the rebel crew.

And England and France look on and sneer,
"His queen of the earth, thou art fallen low,"
Earth's down-trodden millions weep and fear,
So kiss me, mother, and let me go.

Under the burning southern skies,
Our brothers laugh in heart sick pain,
They turn to us with their pleading eyes:
O, mother, say, shall they turn in vain?

Their ranks are thinning from sun to sun,
Yet bravely they hold at bay the foe;
Shall we let them die there one by one?
Nay, kiss me, mother, and let me go.

Can you selfishly cling to your household joys,
Refusing the smallest tithe to yield,
While thousands of mothers are sending boys
Beloved as yours, to the battlefield?

Can you see my country call in vain,
And restrain my arm from the needful blow?
Not so: though your heart should break with pain,
You will kiss me, bless me, and bid me go.

Winchendon, Mass.

GEN. ISAAC INGALLS STEVENS.

General Stevens was born in Andover, in the State of Massachusetts, where his father still survives him. He was in the forty-fifth year of his age. His childhood and youth were remarkable for studious habits. He entered the Military Academy at West Point in 1835, and graduated in 1839 with the first honors of his class. So high did he stand above all others in his class, that it is said there were fifteen degrees between himself and the next next in rank. He learned almost by intuition, a single reading of the most abstruse proposition in mathematics being sufficient to enable him to master it. Gen. Halleck was his classmate, and stood next but one to him at their graduation. His course at the academy is remembered as remarkable for industry, scholarship and high personal character.

In July, 1840, he was promoted to first lieutenant of engineers, and from that period to the breaking out of the Mexican war he was employed upon government fortifications on the New England coast. He was stationed for a time at Fort Adams with the late Col. James L. Mason. While there he became acquainted with and married his wife, Margaret Hazard, daughter of the late Benjamin Hazard of Newport.

Gen. Stevens served with much distinction through the entire Mexican war. He served on General Scott's staff, and was brevetted captain for gallant and meritorious conduct in the battles of Contreras and Churubusco, and major for gallant and meritorious conduct in the battle of Chapultepec, and was severely wounded in the suburbs of San Cosme, city of Mexico, Sept. 13th, 1847, while in Gen. Worth's division.

Probably no two men in the engineer corps of our whole army in Mexico, of their grade, were more gifted or rendered more effective and distinguished service than Stevens and Mason.

After the war, Stevens was attached to the Geodetic survey of the coast of the United States. He remained in that department until the election of President Pierce, as principal assistant to Professor Bache, and had charge of the Coast Survey office in Washington from 1849 to 1853. Here he developed executive and administrative talent of the highest order. He was a warm, political, and personal friend of the President, and was by him, soon after his inauguration, appointed Governor of Washington Territory. At the same time and in connection with his Governorship he was placed in charge of the survey of the Pacific railroad, known as the northern or Oregon route. In the organization of his train in Washington preparatory to his departure for Washington Territory, he displayed great knowledge of everything necessary for the undertaking, sound judgment and discrimination in the selection of men and means, and is said to have devoted himself personally to the work with an energy and perseverance rarely equalled. His survey embraced a great variety of subjects not immediately connected with the location of the road. He has since published a narrative of the expedition, replete with useful and valuable information for all classes, and beautifully illustrated. In connection with this survey let us state a single fact, illustrative of his remarkable power of memory. He directed his quartermaster to make report of all the expenses of the expedition, from its departure from St. Paul till its arrival at the mouth of the Oregon river. When it was furnished, he told his quartermaster he had made a mistake of some twenty thousand dollars, and seating himself in his tent, directed the officer to note the items of expense as he should give them from memory. The result was a correction of the account by some twenty thousand dollars, which was subsequently verified.

On arriving at Olympia, he entered on his duties as Governor, and commenced the organization of the different departments of the territorial government. It will be remembered that our late gifted and much lamented fellow-townsmen, Charles H. Mason, was his Secretary of State. Two such prizes cannot be bestowed upon his conduct in all the various duties imposed on him as Governor of this new territory. It was amongst the first to be organized on our western frontier.

He was ex-officio Indian Agent, and as such was subjected to great trials and perplexities in arranging the concerns of the numerous and populous tribes on the Pacific coast. He was subsequently appointed special agent to settle the difficulties between the Black Feet of Nebraska Territory and the hostile tribes of the coast. Our readers will remember the great Indian councils which were held during this period, embracing on one occasion, it was said, ten thousand warriors. All these responsible, arduous and complicated duties were discharged to the entire satisfaction and commendation of his government.

One of the severest trials which Gen. Stevens encountered during his term of office was a conflict between himself as Governor and Judge Lander, brother of the late Gen. Lander, then the District Judge of the Territory. It became necessary, in the opinion of Gov. Stevens, that he should declare martial law. He did so. A conflict arose between him and the judiciary. The Judge refused to yield. Sides were taken, and it seemed inevitable that blood must be shed. But the Governor, by his great coolness and immovable firmness, triumphed. Different men have espoused opposite sides of this question. The writer has listened to the accounts of many eye witnesses of the whole scene, and is satisfied that Gov. Stevens was justified in all he did on that occasion.

Gen. Stevens subsequently represented Washington Territory for two terms of two years, such as its delegate to Congress. No man on the floor of Congress brought with him more varied and valuable information upon all topics relating to our vast interests in our territories and possessions on the whole Pacific coast. "No man used it more effectively. He was not himself a debater. He was emphatically a worker. He could do nothing but work continually. We never saw anything like him in that respect. He was capable of more hours of continued, effective, mental labor than any man we ever knew. Everybody around him worked. His house, from garret to cellar was thronged with workers. If anybody wanted to be educated upon western affairs he went to Stevens. We once heard Senator Gwin at his own table, accuse him of furnishing a certain Senator with every fact and argument for a three hours speech which he had that morning made against his (Gwin's) favorite project.

Gen. Stevens' politics were Democratic. He was a member of the last famous national convention which met at Charleston, and by adjournment at Baltimore. He represented the Breckinridge interest in that body, and was considered one of its most efficient members. During the last Presidential contest he was chairman of the Breckinridge Executive Committee at Washington, but according to the Philadelphia Press (Mr. Forney) he did not falter in his patriotism. The Press says:

"He urged upon the President the prompt dismissal of Floyd and Thompson from the cabinet and pressed him to trust to the counsels of General Scott. He was, during the winter, in daily consultation with the officers of the army in relation to the defenses of Washington, and exercised a controlling influence over them. For these acts he deserved the gratitude of the country, no less than those other noble Democrats, Holt and Stanton. He was fortunately, stimulated in his loyalty by his admirable wife and her sister daughters of one of the most eminent lawyers of Rhode Island."

When Congress adjourned, Gov. Stevens proceeded to Washington Territory, but returned as soon as he heard of the firing on Fort Sumter, when he came forward with great alacrity and tendered his services to the government in a military capacity. He first secured a colonel's commission, and took command of the famous 79th New York Highland regiment at a time when the soldiers were in open revolt. The conduct of the corps since has demonstrated the value of his discipline, and the soldiers of the regiment have testified their appreciation of his services and love of his person by presenting him with a most costly and magnificent sword and accoutrements. He was confirmed a Brigadier General to September of last year, and the efficiency and brilliancy of his recent southern campaigns, at Port Royal and James Island, are too fresh in the minds of all to be repeated.

Gen. Stevens thought himself entitled to a larger command, but that is past. Though an exceedingly modest man, he could not but be conscious of his powers, and when he compared himself with other officers in the army, while he claimed superiority to none, he could not feel inferior to any.

Gen. Stevens found time amidst all his public duties to deliver lectures on different branches of knowledge before popular audiences and learned societies. He was a frequent contributor to the press and the magazines. Few men wielded a more vigorous pen and was master of a better style.

This is a most hasty and imperfect sketch--altogether unworthy the soldier, the statesman and the man.

To draw his character in all the strength and beauty of its perfections would require a master hand. In person he was much under size. His head was massive and well formed. His intellect was of the very highest order. His attainments were large and liberal, especially in everything relating to physical science. His moral qualities were Herculean and gigantic. In courage nothing could daunt him. As Napoleon said of himself and Ney, he "had two o'clock in the morning courage." His moderation and firmness could never be moved. His will could never be subdued, and his energy was superior to every obstacle.

In conversation he was truly delightful. He charmed you by the extent and variety of his knowledge and the modesty and simplicity of his demeanor.

But those who knew him in his own home, there will ever remain the most cherished and sacred remembrance. He might be called, almost without a figure, the light of his house. He has left a wife three daughters, and a son who was assistant adjutant of the brigade, and who was wounded by the same volley which killed his father. He is a sterling boy, reared in his childhood to all the hardships of frontier life, and has already gained great credit for his gallant conduct at James Island. --Prof. Jour.
